

Reel Big Fish headline Spring Weekend

Ska-punk musicians Reel Big Fish will perform at St. Bonaventure University at 8 p.m. Thursday, April 28, in the Reilly Center Arena to kick off the traditional Spring Weekend.

A ticket sales-date has not yet been set, but prices will be $20 for the public and $15 for students and members of the University community.

"The St. Bonaventure community is excited to have such a high-energy band as Reel Big Fish performing at SBU," said Steve Plesac, director of student activities. "They're sure to provide an entertaining jump into Spring Weekend."

Reel Big Fish is a Southern California ska-punk band known for its hyperkinetic stage shows, juvenile humor, ironic covers of new wave pop songs and metallic sounds of ska. The band's music became mainstream in the summer of 1997, when the single "Sell Out" became a modern rock radio and MTV

Based in Huntington Beach, Calif., Reel Big Fish was originally a trio comprised of vocalist/guitarist Aaron Barrett, bassist Matt Wong and drummer Andrew Gonzales. At that stage, the group was a conventional rock band with pop-metal leanings that covered both classic rock and Top 40 songs. After several months, the band discovered ska and decided to add horn players. Reel

Big Fish had a difficult time maintaining a stable horn section, and it took several years before their final lineup featuring Tavis Werts on trumpet, Scott Klopfenstein also on trumpet and vocals and Grant Barry and Dan Regan both on trombone, fell into place.

This new and final lineup of Reel Big Fish recorded their debut album, Everything Sucks, in 1995, and released it themselves. Everything Sucks became a word-of-mouth underground hit in ska-punk and college circles. Following its success, the band signed with the indie label Mojo Records. The label president, Jay Rifkin, and former Oingo Boingo bassist, John Avila, co-produced Turn the Radio Off, Reel Big Fish's first album for Mojo.
