was his mother. That was the only fact in her life that counted. Ann Farrel. It was a fact that had begun twenty years before she found him, a small warm child at her side. She had only him in all the world. He was her one treasure. Money, a home, good clothes, friends, the things that men seem somehow to accumulate, they go down the years, had to her grasp. Perhaps she had not thought about them to go after them with a grim determination that in any rate she was working as hard as she could since Jack was 6 weeks old and earned just enough but no

"JACK, WHAT'S THAT FOR?" SHE ASKED.
