

From CATTARAUGUS FREEMAN
Ellicottville, Cattaraugus County, N. Y.
Thursday, August 18, 1864

Heroism in the 154th Regiment.

We publish elsewhere a list of the casualties in the 154th Regiment, under P. H. Jones commanding. Dr. Van Arman, who kindly furnished us the list, gave us a thrilling account of the heroism of the men, particularly of their devotion to their colors, at the battle of Rocky Faced Ridge, Ga. George Bishop, of this village, where he leaves a wife and two or three children, was the regimental color bearer. He was ordered to plant the standard on the crest of a hill in view of the rebel entrenchments. He had scarcely done so, when a rebel sharp shooter sent a bullet through him, killing him instantly. Serg't Augustus Shippey, of Co. B, seeing the colors fall, scaled the ridge and replanted them. He had just accomplished this, when a rebel bullet killed him! Corp. T. R. Aldrich, of the same Co., then sprang forward and replanted the colors, standing unmoved amid the whistling messengers of death, for some moments. But a rebel sharp shooter finally brought him down, and he died without a groan! Private Orzo C. Greeley—a distant relative of Horace Greeley, of the Tribune—then seized the colors, planting them firmly, holding the staff in his right hand. He occupied his position but a few moments, and fell dead at his post. Orderly Serg't Ambrose F. Arnold, of Co. D, then rushed forward, seized the flag and was wounded at the moment he continued to do so until he was killed by a superior officer. In the meantime a hundred bullets whizzed by Serg't Arnold's head, but he did not flinch.

and five others, and it is questionable which of these five braves—four dead and one living—displayed the most nobleness, daring and courage. It is easy, however, to decide which was the most heroic of this incident.

Colds and Coughs. Experience has proved that simple remedies act speedily and certainly when taken in the early stage