Europe two years ago and applied to the Iowa situation.

Except for three or four thrusts at the Chicago Tribune, the address was free from the caustic which in the campaign, just closed has marked the colonel's campaign efforts. The Tribune was taken to task for its story that his visit to Russia was a fleeting one arranged and conducted by soviet officials.

"From the time I reached Moscow," he asserted, "until I left Odessa, I was in charge of General Haskell, a representative of Herbert Hoover. Mr. Hoover arranged the trip for me".

Business men, he said, would welcome the change to the cooperative plan because it would tend to insure them of continued financial integrity. In this connection he referred to a conversation with Senator Pepper, senate friend of Coolidge, in which the Iowan was told that ninety percent of all business men ultimately fail.

"American business today is the most hazardous undertaking in the world", he asserted.

Under Colonel Brookhart's plan, one man could have no more than one vote. Capital earnings would be limited to five percent and labor would hire capital instead of capital hiring labor. The plan, he said, had reached its highest state of development in Denmark but it has survived the test of famine, despotism and pestilence in soviet Russia.

In defense of his limitation of capital's earnings to five percent, Mr. Brookhart referred to the growth of national wealth since the beginning of the republic and declared it had averaged more than four percent.

In closing the speaker outlined a plan whereby his cooperative plan could be made international in its scope and "do more to end war than all the leagues and other political contrivances that have ever been devised".

Mason City, Ia., June 10. —(P)—Smith Brookhart turned up unexpectedly at the morning private session of the Iowa state federation of labor in session here, for a "farewell address" to the Iowa delegates. He spoke for only a few minutes, mentioning some of the important points in his address here last night, notable his proposal to establish a systo the primary road fund.

Berlenbach, Stribling *Creston, Iowa Fight Tonight

New York, June 10. —(P)—Paul Berlenbach will have an advantage of 3½ lbs tonight when he defends his world's light-heavyweight championship against Young Stribling of Georgia in a 15-round match at Yankee stadium. The champion this afternoon scaled 174½ and Stribling 171.

The champion and challenger both appeared in excellent condition when they were examined and weighed before the state athletic commission. The difference in their poundage came as a surprise. It was expected that Stribling would be closer to the class limit of 175 pounds. Creston News Advertiser pg. 1 Thursday June 10, 1926
